PHP: A widely-used web development scripting language that can be embedded into HTML.

CGI: Allows you to create things like forms and counters on your web page. The Common Gateway Interface (CGI) is a standard for interfacing external applications with information servers, such as HTTP or Web servers. A plain HTML document that the Web daemon retrieves is static, which means it exists in a constant state: a text file that doesn't change. A CGI program, on the other hand, is executed in real-time, so that it can output dynamic information.

Front Page Server Extensions: Similar to CGI but the Microsoft version. Front Page has features built in that assume the existence of a web server that has the Front Page Extensions installed. It's possible to use Front Page to create web pages without the extensions enabled MySQL: The world's most popular open source database, recognized for its speed and reliability.

SSL (Secure Sockets Layer): is a security technology that is commonly used to secure server to browser transactions. This generally includes the securing of any information passed by a browser (such as a customer's credit card number or password) to a webserver (such as an online store). SSL protects data submitted over the Internet from being intercepted and viewed by unintended recipients
